

Universiteit
Leiden
The Netherlands

The nature of the verbal self-monitor

Ganushchak, A.Y.

Citation

Ganushchak, A. Y. (2008, March 12). The nature of the verbal self-monitor. Retrieved from <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/12635>

Version: Not Applicable (or Unknown)

License: Licence agreement concerning inclusion of doctoral thesis in the Institutional Repository of the University of Leiden

Downloaded from: <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/12635>

Note: To cite this publication please use the final published version (if applicable).

Acknowledgements

It's a special feeling to bring a huge story to the end. However, a PhD thesis is not written by itself, but is the result of the cooperation between a lot of people. I would like to thank all the people who have helped me travel through my PhD years and made writing this PhD thesis possible.

First of all, my deepest thanks to my parents. Thanks for giving me the chance of becoming who I am. Pap, thanks for making me question everything and doubt even the most solid facts. Thanks for all the evening battles, in which we conquered and defeated 'nice and friendly' creatures and of course hunt for yellow dots. Mam, thanks for keeping me motivated and stuffing me with all the nice food to keep me going. :)

Jeroen thanks for being there for me and for believing in me. I think you got the hardest job of needing to handle me on an everyday basis. And dealing with my frustrations with statistics, uncooperative data, and software packages that refused to do what I wanted them to do. And of course, accepting the fact that one day you might wake up in a jungle with ferocious tigers. ;) Thank you. Dette and Will thank you for your support.

Marjolein, Nele, and Bianca thank you all for keeping me company on a daily basis via MSN. Thank you for listening, helping, and just having fun :) Mar, I still remember how many years ago we were filling in our university applications and you firmly stated that psychology is not a real science and you wanted to do something more scientific and ventured to study physics, chemistry, and biology. And I went off studying psychology. Both of us are now promoted in psycholinguistics :) Thanks for helping me with selecting countless semantically related words, and helping constructing sentences that made sense. Thanks for the discussions about life, universe, and everything (and believing that answer is 42). I'm not sure if I'm that grateful for introducing me to multiple series of books resulting in me getting addicted to all of them and wanting to have them all! ;) Nele thanks for all the good times we had :) And I think you are the only person whom I know, who thinks that statistics are fun and trying with full enthusiasm to make other people believe it. I must admit, that you did not manage to convince me that statistics are fun, but you definitely killed my fear of diving into the world of numbers and formulas. After my statement that I hate InDesign, screaming out that it is "A great program. I love it!" and immediately providing me with a handbook and a number of links to websites. This thesis would not turn out to be like this without you. Bianca thanks for all the help with correcting my Dutch, being there for me, for all the coffee we had, for all the conversations, and generally for all the fun.

Thomas thank you for believing in me, fueling my interest in criminology, having stimulating discussions, and just relaxing evenings :) Mart thanks a lot! You were a great help at work as well as outside of work. Thanks a lot for helping with battles with Presentation and the Zerg. Thanks for all the wine-, good food-, and game-evenings.

Heidi, Iemke, Ingrid, and Dirk without you this thesis would not have been possible. Thank you for the brainstorming about experiment ideas, design, and making sense of the data. Iemke and Heidi thank you for making me focus on other things in life and thanks for making me consider making changes. Rinus thank you for e-prime, lab talks and passionate stories about Japan :)

And last but not least, my gratitude to Vivian. Thank you, Vivian for struggling through my Dutch summary and making it readable and understandable.

Thank you all!

Curriculum vitae

A. (Lesya) Y. Ganushchak was born in Nikolaev (Ukraine), on February 18th 1978. She attended the Jeanne D'Arc College in Maastricht, where she obtained an International Bachelorate in 1998. She commenced to study psychology at Maastricht University in 1998, where she became a teaching assistant in 2001. She graduated in 2003, with specializations in Neuropsychology and Educational Psychology. She was employed as a Ph.D. student in 2003 at the department of Cognitive Neuroscience at Maastricht University, and in 2006 transferred to the section of Cognitive Psychology at Leiden University.