

Universiteit
Leiden
The Netherlands

Tolerating extremism : to what extent should intolerance be tolerated?

Guiora, A.N.

Citation

Guiora, A. N. (2013, October 16). Tolerating extremism : to what extent should intolerance be tolerated?. Retrieved from <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/21977>

Version: Corrected Publisher's Version

License: Licence agreement concerning inclusion of doctoral thesis in the Institutional Repository of the University of Leiden

Downloaded from: <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/21977>

Note: To cite this publication please use the final published version (if applicable).

Cover Page

Universiteit Leiden

The handle <http://hdl.handle.net/1887/21977> holds various files of this Leiden University dissertation.

Author: Guiora, Amos Neuser

Title: Tolerating extremism : to what extent should intolerance be tolerated?

Issue Date: 2013-10-16

Propositions relating to the dissertation Tolerating Extremism: To What Extent Should Intolerance be Tolerated? by Amos N. Guiora

1. The religious element in religious terrorism is really religious.
2. Extremism, both secular and religious, is one of the most important challenges for our time.
3. Successful counter-terrorism presupposes an adequate diagnosis of the problem.
4. There is Breivik and there is Bouyeri, but there are more Bouyeri's than Breivik's.
5. Terrorism motivated by religion is more difficult to combat than terrorism motivated by secular considerations.
6. Fatwa's are not only manufactured in Iran, but also in the Netherlands (although few people seem to be aware of that).
7. Society must recognize the danger posed by extremists; however, casting too broad a net is similarly dangerous to society and individuals alike.
8. Unlike religious conduct and speech, religious belief cannot be regulated.
9. Parallel societies, arguably enhanced by multiculturalism, do not contribute to the general welfare of larger society.
10. Limiting free speech of religious extremist inciters is necessary and legitimate to protect society and individuals alike.