1 From Hardinxveld to Noordhoorn and beyond	17
1.1 Introduction	17
1.2 Research aims: point of departure	19
1.3 Research area and dataset	22
1.4 Structure and methodology: a road map	23
1.5 Background	24
Notes	25
2 Thoughts in transition – A European perspective	27
2.1 Introduction	27
2.2 The mechanics of spread	27
2.3 In search of causality	30
2.4 Back to Basics?	33
2.5 Defining scope	35
Notes	36
3 Thoughts on transition - The Lower Rhine Area	39
3.1 Introduction	39
3.2 Neolithic successions: a brief overview	39
3.3 On the fringe...	43
3.3.1 Cultural developments	44
3.3.2 Material developments and contact	45
3.3.3 Introducing domesticates and cultigens	46
3.3.4 Settling down?	47
3.4 Factors of perception	47
3.4.1 Bias I: the upland-wetland dichotomy	48
3.4.2 Bias II: the Scandinavian paragon	50
3.4.3 Bias III: the constructs of Mesolithic and Neolithic	52
3.5 Perspectives on Neolithisation	55
3.6 Concluding remarks	57
Notes	57
4 Lower Rhine Area sites: a qualitative review	59
4.1 Introduction	59
4.2 A regional distinction	59
4.2.1 Mountainous zone	60
4.2.2 Loess region	61

4.2.3 Sandy uplands	61
4.2.4 Wetlands	62
4.2.5 River valleys	64
4.3 Uplands and wetlands: contrasting contexts	64
4.3.1 Preservation of artefacts	66
4.3.2 Preservation of features	70
4.3.3 Upland Bergschenhoek	71
4.3.4 Artefacts, features and information	73
4.3.5 Spatio-temporal patterning	73
4.3.5.1 Vertical displacement of artefacts	76
4.3.5.2 Horizontal displacement of artefacts	78
4.3.5.3 Erosion, colluviation, slope effects and ‘decapitated’ sites	79
4.3.6 Persistent places and consistent use	81
4.3.6.1 Short duration – direct change	81
4.3.6.2 Medium duration – mobility and the seasonal round	82
4.3.6.3 Long duration – persistent places	83
4.3.6.4 Dealing with scales of patterning and disturbance	84
4.3.7 A continuum of conditions	86
4.4 Methodological perspectives	87
4.4.1 Theory for patterning	88
4.4.2 Research traditions in investigating Mesolithic and Neolithic sites	90
4.4.3 General emphases in excavation practice	92
4.4.4 Methodological characteristics of upland and wetland excavations	93
4.4.4.1 Artefacts	93
4.4.4.2 Features	95
4.4.4.3 Chronology and dating	96
4.4.4.4 Subsistence, seasonality and ecology	97
4.4.4.5 Implications for establishing site-function	99
4.4.5 A note on the limits and delimitation of sites	100
4.4.6 Retaining a site approach?	102
4.4.7 Current Dutch situation	104
4.5 An archaeological site typology	105
4.5.1 Prominent wetland sandy elevations (river dunes)	107
4.5.2 Moderate wetland sandy elevations (coastal dunes and barriers up to c. 1m)	108
4.5.3 Low elevations (levees and low sandy elevations)	109
4.5.4 Multiple clusters	110
4.5.5 Distorted sites	111
4.5.6 Isolated sites and off-site finds	112
4.5.7 Using site templates	113

4.6 Representativeness	113
4.6.1 Qualitative potential	113
4.6.2 ‘They do things differently there?’	114
4.6.3 Wetlands as active agents?	117
Notes	118
5 The Late Mesolithic – diversity in uniformity?	121
5.1 Introduction	121
5.2 Chronological and cultural context	121
5.2.1 Mesolithic chronology	122
5.2.2 Lithic characteristics	123
5.2.3 The end of the Late Mesolithic	124
5.2.3.1 Early Neolithic developments in the loess zone (5300-4900 cal BC)	124
5.2.3.2 Neolithic developments on the coversand and in the Meuse valley (5300-4200 cal BC)	126
5.2.3.3 The Swifterbant culture in the wetlands and wetland margins (5100-3700 cal BC)	127
5.2.3.4 Simultaneous developments	127
5.3 Late Mesolithic sites in the LRA	128
5.3.1 Geographical and ecological background	131
5.3.1.1 Southern coversand landscape	131
5.3.1.2 Northern coversand landscape	132
5.3.1.3 Western wetlands and wetland margin	133
5.3.1.4 River valley/valley floor	134
5.3.2 Sites and groups	135
5.3.2.1 Group 1: southern coversand	136
5.3.2.2 Group 2: northern coversand	136
5.3.2.3 Group 3: wetlands and wetland margin	136
5.3.2.4 Group 4: river valley/valley floor	139
5.3.2.5 Partial patterns	139
5.4 The Late Mesolithic – settlement ‘grammar’	139
5.4.1 Historical aspects and perspective	140
5.4.2 A settlement ‘fabric’ approach: texture, grain, redundancy	141
5.4.3 Site location choice: the texture	141
5.4.3.1 Locational characteristics: southern coversand landscape	142
5.4.3.2 Locational characteristics: northern coversand landscape	143
5.4.3.3 Locational characteristics: wetland and river valley locations	144
5.4.4 Settlement structure: the grain	146
5.4.4.1 The southern coversand landscape: concentrations, clusters and scatters	146
5.4.4.2 Interpreting concentrations, clusters and scatters	151
5.4.4.3 Concentrations, clusters and scatters: northern coversand, wetlands and river valley	156
5.4.4.4 Alternative aspects of settlement structure	158

5.4.5 Settlement ‘investment’: redundancy	159
5.4.5.1 Density and intensity	160
5.4.5.2 Feature variability	163
5.4.5.3 Hearths and hearthpits	164
5.4.5.4 Pits and postholes	167
5.4.5.5 Dwellings and other structures	168
5.4.5.6 Graves	174
5.4.5.7 Other elements	176
5.4.6 Late Mesolithic sites and settlement system in the LRA: defining settlement grammar	176
5.4.6.1 The southern coversands: consistent patterning	177
5.4.6.2 The northern coversands: differences of degree	178
5.4.6.3 Wetland (margin) and river valleys: a different type of occupation?	179
5.4.6.4 Interpreting variability	181
5.5 Lithic assemblage analysis	181
5.5.1 Theoretical background	181
5.5.1.1 Curated and expedient technologies and toolkits	182
5.5.1.2 Assemblage composition	183
5.5.1.3 Aspects of mobility and site use	183
5.5.2 Characteristics of the lithic datasets	185
5.5.3 Technological characteristics	187
5.5.3.1 Blades and flakes	187
5.5.3.2 Cores and core rejuvenation flakes	190
5.5.3.3 Technological characteristics and potential implications	191
5.5.4 Typological characteristics	193
5.5.4.1 Points and backed blades	196
5.5.4.2 Other tools	198
5.5.4.3 Retouched flakes and blades	199
5.5.4.4 Percentage distribution and box plot analysis	201
5.5.4.5 Visual cluster analysis	203
5.5.4.6 Typological characteristics and potential implications	206
5.5.5 Wommersom quartzite	208
5.5.5.1 Wommersom quartzite contribution	208
5.5.5.2 Technological preference and Wommersom quartzite	209
5.5.5.3 Typological characteristics and Wommersom quartzite	211
5.5.5.4 Interpreting the contribution of Wommersom quartzite	212
5.5.6 Raw material procurement	214
5.5.6.1 Raw material composition	214
5.5.6.2 Practices of procurement: Wommersom quartzite	215
5.5.6.3 Practices of procurement: long distance supply	217
5.5.6.4 Comparing systems of procurement	218
5.5.6.5 From raw material patterns to mobility processes	220
5.5.7 Conclusions regarding lithic assemblage spectrum and raw material	222

5.6 Discussion	223
5.6.1 Data criticism and interpretative approach	223
5.6.2 Theory on mobility	224
5.6.2.1 Beyond foraging and collecting	224
5.6.2.2 Criticism of the forager-collector model	225
5.6.2.3 Site location, settlement structure and persistency	227
5.6.3 Implementation: site location choice and settlement structure	228
5.6.3.1 Southern coversand area: consistent conditions	229
5.6.3.2 Wetlands and wetland margin: from space to place	229
5.6.3.3 Northern coversand area and river valley sites: within the continuum	230
5.6.4 Features and ‘investment’	231
5.6.4.1 Dwelling structures	231
5.6.4.2 Burials	234
5.6.4.3 Storage	235
5.6.4.4 Boats and canoes	236
5.6.5 Toolkit and technology	238
5.6.5.1 Technological choices	238
5.6.5.2 Typology and resource procurement strategies	239
5.6.5.3 Raw material use	241
5.6.6 Interpreting mobility and settlement systems	242
5.6.6.1 Wetland and upland environments: a continuum of possibilities with a wet advantage	242
5.6.6.2 Diversity and combined systems	244
5.6.6.3 Diverse systems of mobility: other approaches	247
5.6.6.4 Conclusions on mobility and settlement system	250
5.7 Implications for Neolithisation	252
5.7.1 Theoretical background: Mesolithic influence and complexity	252
5.7.2 Interpreting diversity and Neolithisation	253
5.7.3 Aspects of diversity and distance	254
5.7.4 Conclusion: diversity and Neolithisation	256
Notes	256
6 Communities in transition: some remarks on aspects of Neolithisation, long-term perspective and change	263
6.1 Introduction	263
6.2 Interpreting Neolithisation	265
6.2.1 Beyond terminology	266
6.2.2 Against dualism	267
6.3 A long-term perspective	270
6.3.1 Adopting a long-term perspective	270
6.3.2 From time to temporality to memory	272

6.4 Structure, agency and continuity	276
6.4.1 Agency and archaeology	278
6.4.2 Agency and scale	279
6.5 Towards a dwelling perspective?	281
6.6 Archaeologies of inhabitation	283
6.6.1 Phenomenology, experience and archaeology	284
6.6.2 Relationality and networks	286
6.6.3 Rounds, routines, rhythms: adding time	287
6.7 Converging thoughts: research aim and outline	289
Notes	292
7 Unsettled issues: a long-term perspective on aspects of mobility, land-use and livelihood (5500-2500 cal BC)	295
7.1 Introduction	295
7.2 The rhythms of the land	296
7.2.1 Land, water and change: an impression	297
7.2.2 Landscape change and its impact	300
7.2.2.1 Dealing with a dynamic environment	301
7.2.2.2 Cultural choices: several case-studies	302
7.2.2.3 Common traits	306
7.2.3 Land and identity	308
7.3 Dimensions of land-use, subsistence and procurement	310
7.3.1 Foraging, farming and procurement	312
7.3.2 The wild and the tame	314
7.3.2.1 Phase 1: c. 4700-4400 cal BC, a tentative start	314
7.3.2.2 Phase 2: c. 4400-3800 cal BC, limited importance	317
7.3.2.3 Phase 3: c. 3800-3200 cal BC, substantial contribution	318
7.3.2.4 Phase 4: c. 3200-2500 cal BC, partial consolidation	319
7.3.2.5 Methodological considerations	320
7.3.2.6 The meat of the matter	323
7.3.3 Cultivating crops	326
7.3.3.2 (Making) space	328
7.3.3.3 Other evidence	329
7.3.3.4 A local tradition?	330
7.3.3.5 Core business or convenience?	332
7.3.4 Evidence for seasonality and permanence in occupation	333
7.3.4.1 Late Mesolithic and Swifterbant culture: flexible strategies	334
7.3.4.2 Hazendonk group: first year-round occupation	336
7.3.4.3 Vlaardingen culture: interaction and continued mobility	337
7.3.4.4 Seasoned solutions	338
7.3.5 A note on non-food raw material procurement	339
7.3.5.1 Pottery	340
7.3.5.2 Flint and Wommersom quartzite	342

7.3.5.3 Other stone resources, amber and jet	344
7.3.5.4 Adzes, Breitkeile and axes	344
7.3.5.5 Fixed paths, familiar worlds	346
7.4 Alternative options	348
7.4.1 Where in the mosaic?	348
7.4.1.1 Profiling the LRA wetlands	349
7.4.1.2 Understanding the LRA profile	350
7.4.1.3 An ethnographic frame of reference	351
7.4.1.4 Spatio-temporal flexibility	353
7.4.2 From hunting to herding and harvesting? – changing scope	354
7.4.2.1 The availability model – another look	354
7.4.2.2 Adding strategies – characterizing ‘substitution’	357
7.4.3 Towards integrative strategies	361
7.4.3.1 Continued diversity	361
7.4.3.2 Integrative strategies	363
Notes	364
8 Unsettled issues: settlement systems, integrative strategies and Neolithisation	369
8.1 Introduction: integrative strategies and settlement systems	369
8.1.1 Site qualities and mobility: criteria	371
8.1.1.1 Regional attribution	371
8.1.1.2 Dealing with seasonality	371
8.1.1.3 Other criteria	372
8.1.2 Defining the system	373
8.1.3 Late Mesolithic and Early Swifterbant (c. 6500-4500 cal BC)	378
8.1.3.1 Attribution of function	378
8.1.3.2 Different rates of residential mobility	381
8.1.4 Middle Swifterbant (c. 4500-3800 cal BC)	383
8.1.4.1 Attribution of function	383
8.1.4.2 Absence of permanency	386
8.1.5 Hazendonk group and Late Swifterbant (c. 3800-3400 cal BC)	388
8.1.5.1 Attribution of function	388
8.1.5.2 Not all is permanent	392
8.1.6 Vlaardingen culture (c. 3400-2500 cal BC)	395
8.1.6.1 Attribution of function	395
8.1.6.2 Continued mobility	398
8.1.6.3 Cautionary tales and alternatives	401
8.1.7 Conclusion	404
8.2 Discussion: making a short story long again?	407
8.2.1 Cutting a long story short: premises	407
8.2.2 An approach of alternatives	409
8.2.3 What about ‘the uplands’?	411
8.2.4 Neolithisation: a long transition again?	412

8.3 Unsettled issues, continued practices	413
8.3.1 Land owns people	413
8.3.2 Subsistence and settlement systems	414
8.3.3 Neolithisation: no need for novelties?	414
Notes	417
9 Synthesis	419
9.1 Introduction	419
9.2 Assessing the evidence	420
9.3 The Late Mesolithic: a diverse background	420
9.3.1 Sites in the landscape	421
9.3.2 Evidence from assemblages	422
9.3.3 Context for occupation	423
9.3.4 Settlement systems and Neolithisation	423
9.3.5 The Mesolithic roots of Neolithisation	424
9.4 Neolithisation in the wetlands: a long-term community perspective	425
9.4.1 Wetland environment and dynamics	426
9.4.2 Wetland communities: land-use and livelihood	426
9.4.3. Integrative strategies	429
9.4.4 A new perspective on settlement systems	431
9.5 Neolithisation: a long transition	433
9.5.1 Premises of a short transition	434
9.5.2 Perspective for a long transition	434
9.5.3 Neolithisation and ‘new rhythms’	435
9.5.4 European perspectives	436
9.6 Total phenomena: human-environment relationships in the wetlands	437
9.6.1 Community-land relationships	437
9.6.2 Wetland and wetland margin inhabitation	438
9.7 Future prospects	441
Notes	442
10 Epilogue: Afterthoughts on Neolithisation: Zvelebil’s model reconsidered	443
10.1 Introduction	443
10.2 Revisiting the availability model: indigenous perspectives	443
10.3 ‘Attitude’: the context of a giving environment	444
10.3.1 The giving environment	444
10.3.2 Resilient modes of thought	445

10.4 Interaction: a context of networks	447
10.4.1 Networks	447
10.4.2 Network dynamics	448
10.5 Integration	448
10.6 Application and future use	451
