Sara Petrollino was born in 1984 in Campobasso, a town in the region of Molise, Italy. In 2001 she travelled for the first time to Africa, when she visited Chad. Upon her return she moved to Naples to study African languages and cultures at the University “L’Orientale”, where she obtained her Bachelor’s degree with a thesis on grammaticalization in Arabic-based pidgin and creole languages. She attended Arabic classes in Tunisia and spent some time travelling across Tanzania before moving to Leiden, where she attended the Master program in African linguistics while working as a student assistant from 2009 to 2011. In those years she traveled for a short interval to South West Ethiopia, where she got in touch with the Hamar people. After obtaining her Master’s degree from Leiden University with a thesis on multilingual production among the Iraqw people of Tanzania, she moved to France where she was recruited as PhD researcher by the Laboratoire d’Excellence ASLAN in Lyon. She has been recently appointed education/research staff member and lecturer at Leiden University.
