

Universiteit
Leiden
The Netherlands

There is no doubt. Muslim scholarship and society in 17th-century Central Sudanic Africa

Dalen, D.A.M.E. van

Citation

Dalen, D. A. M. E. van. (2015, April 22). There is no doubt. Muslim scholarship and society in 17th-century Central Sudanic Africa. Retrieved from <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/32788>

Version: Corrected Publisher's Version

License: Licence agreement concerning inclusion of doctoral thesis in the Institutional Repository of the University of Leiden

Downloaded from: <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/32788>

Note: To cite this publication please use the final published version (if applicable).

Cover Page

Universiteit Leiden

The handle <http://hdl.handle.net/1887/32788> holds various files of this Leiden University dissertation.

Author: Dalen, Dorrit van

Title: There is no doubt. Muslim scholarship and society in 17th-century Central Sudanic Africa

Issue Date: 2015-04-22

THERE IS NO DOUBT
Muslim scholarship and society
in 17th-century central sudanic Africa.

Proefschrift

Ter verkrijging van de graad van Doctor aan de Universiteit Leiden op gezag van Rector Magnificus prof. mr. C.J.J.M. Stolker volgens besluit van het College voor Promoties
te verdedigen op woensdag 22 april 2015
klokke 16.15 uur

door

Dorrit van Dalen
geboren te Hillegom
in 1962

Promotiecommissie:

Promotores: Prof. dr. P.M. Sijpesteijn
Prof. dr. R.J. Ross

Overige leden: Prof. dr. L. Brenner
Dr. A. Brigaglia
Prof. dr. C.R. Lange

Contents

Acknowledgements	3
A note on transliteration	5
Map of western and northern Africa	6
1. Preface	7
1. The question	7
2. Coordinates	8
3. Intellectual history and philology	12
4. Peripheries	17
5. Sources and structure	22
2. Dramatis loci	23
1. A history of Bornu and Baghirmi as Islamic states	23
2. The spread of Islam	30
3. Ethnicity, religion, slavery	35
4. Islam and traditional religions	37
5. Conclusion	42
3. Muḥammad al-Wālī	45
1. Facts of life	45
2. Oeuvre	46
3. Reputation	50
4. Education	54
5. Conclusion	56
4. The scholar's habitat	59
1. Scholarship	59
2. Religious leadership	62
3. Intellectual environment: genres	64
4. Intellectual environment: themes	66
5. Conclusion	73
5. Method and message	75
1. Al-Sanūsi's Ṣughra	76
2. The Kabbe	82
3. Between oral and scholarly text	84
4. Tradition with a twist	93
5. Conclusion	101
6. Demonising smokers	105
1. How tobacco conquered the Islamic lands	105
2. Al-Wālī's point of view	112
3. A folktale about the devil's pee	116
4. From Abgar to al-Azhar	121
5. Conclusion	124
7. On writing	127
1. Author and authority	127
2. Why did al-Wālī translate the Fulani commentary?	133
3. From orality to literacy	134
4. Knowing and the knower	137
5. Conclusion	141

8. Certainties in times of choice

143

- Annex I. Al-adilla al-ḥisān fī bayān taḥrīm shurb al-dukhān.
An edition of the Arabic text.
- Annex II. Valid proofs to proclaim smoking forbidden.
A translation.
- Annex III. ‘Awsikum yā’ ma‘shar al-ikhwān.
An edition of al-Wālī’s poem.

Bibliography

213

Acknowledgements

Writing a dissertation never seemed a natural thing for me to do, but this is the part I have been looking forward to for years: the part where I can express my gratitude to the people who have helped to realise it, by sharing with me their knowledge, skills, brainwaves and wisdom. At the very beginning of my research, in a stage when the road ahead was quite obscure, Rüdiger Seesemann discussed with me a number of possible paths of exploration into the history of Islam in Africa, and also into the Herskovits Library. Along the way, the references, interest and critical questions from Hamid Bobboyi, Dmitry Bondarev, Geert Jan van Gelder and Murray Last have been of much help, and it is a joy to thank them here. Walter Young I thank for his interest and his explanations of the terminology of logic that the subject of this study, Muḥammad al-Wālī, sometimes used. To all of them I am grateful for their practical help and inspiration.

If, in the past years, I have not become a true historian, I have at least come to share a sentiment that is fundamental to that profession, that is gratitude for the kindness of librarians. For their hospitality, trust and endless variety of services, I wish to thank the librarians of the Melville Herskovits Library of Northwestern University in Evanston (Illinois), David Easterbrook and Esmeralda Kale and their staff, as well as the staff of the Leiden University Library, especially of the Special Collections Reading Room, and Salisu Bala, co-ordinator of the Nigeria Arabic Manuscript Project of the Centre for Historic Documentation and Research at Ahmadu Bello University in Kaduna, Nigeria. The library of the Africa Study Centre in Leiden is a category in itself, thanks to the indefatigable helpfulness, going far beyond professionalism, of Ella Verkayk and her colleagues. They deserve many, many thanks and high praise.

This book is not only the result of hard labour. Sheer luck, godsend and happy coincidences have played an important role, and I would like to mention three. Coming across the rare manuscript - Or. 3862, here in Leiden - of a scholarly text from the region to which I have pledged my heart about twenty-five years ago, was the first. Then came the friendship of Djimet Seli, now dean of the Faculty of Humanities of the University of N'djamena, whom I met in a different context. I am deeply indebted to him for arranging meetings for me in the Chadian village of Abgar, where al-Wālī once lived, and even more for the many discussions we have had and will hopefully continue to have on issues of culture in Chad. Perhaps the most surprising coincidence was that my good friend Maḥmūd Nasr, accountant and entrepreneur in Cairo, turned out to be a disciple of the ṣūfī shaykh and Nigerian historian Ibrāhīm Ṣāliḥ Yūnus al-Ḥusayni, who has a home in Cairo too. I thank Maḥmūd for his initiative to interview Ibrāhīm Ṣāliḥ on topics he knew were of interest to me, and the shaykh himself for sharing his knowledge again in this way.

Parts of this book were presented as articles or as presentations at seminars and symposia in Leiden, Naples, Tilburg, Cambridge and Cape Town. The comments and questions from colleagues in fields that vary from Africa to authorship have helped me more than I can describe to sharpen my argument and open up new views. The same is true for the discussions in the learning community in Leiden, and notably in the branches of the Leiden University Centre for the study of Islam and Society (LUCIS), Leiden University Centre for the Study of Religion (LUCSoR), Leiden Institute for Area Studies (LIAS) and the Leiden Global Interactions programme (LGI). It is a privilege to be a part of this community. Most of all I am obliged to the leaders of the Leiden Global Interactions programme, who have given me the opportunity, and generous facilities, to embark on my own research project, as part of the larger effort. I also thank the Leiden University Fund/ van Walsem for sponsoring a research visit to Chad, and the University of Hamburg (Manuskriptkulturen in Asien, Afrika und Europa) for sponsoring my participation in a workshop at the University of Cape Town.

Once this dissertation had taken the form of much text divided into somewhat equal portions, I have benefited from comments of Nico Kaptein and of my former boss Pieter van Dijk, which have contributed to the final shape of this work. Jelle Bruning and Arnoud Vrolijk have helped to find solutions for the translation of some of the more complex formulations in al-Wālī's legal treatise, which I had put off till the end. I am indebted to them all.

This book is dedicated to him who said to me: 'Let us go then, you and I'. That is all.

A note on transcription and dates

The transliteration of Arabic words follows the system that is used by many journals such as the Journal of Islamic Studies and the Journal of Islamic Africa. This includes words that have been incorporated in the English language, such as jihād, ‘ulamā’, ḥarām and ṣūfī, which are printed in roman type. Words that are foreign to the English language are printed in italics, including for instance the singular of the word ‘ulamā’, that is ‘ālim (scholar). In order to not distract the reader with formal matters any more than necessary, I have chosen to write ḥadīth as an Arabic word known in the English language, and use the anglicised form of ḥadīths as its plural. Finally, the names of some places and persons in contemporary Chad – such as Abgar Alim or Ahmat Saleh – are written in the way people there usually spell them today, in Latin script without diacritics.

The dates in this book are dates of the Common Era. This complies with a convention in modern scholarship on Islamic history in West Africa. The manuscripts which have formed the point of departure for my research are, almost without exception, not dated.