Acknowledgements

First and foremost I have to thank the Faculty of Archaeology, Leiden University for granting me the opportunity to pursue a self-funded PhD project since 2003, next to my occupation as assistant librarian in the faculty library (1997-2010). In addition, the thesis project would have been impossible without a series of travel and lodging grants (October-November 2000, December 2002-January 2003, June 2004, April-June 2005 and May-June 2007) awarded by the Koninklijk Nederlands Instituut in Rome = Royal Netherlands Institute in Rome (KNIR), initially to develop a line of research and then to make it happen. These stays allowed me to have access to the library collections of the German Archaeological Institute (Deutsches Archäologisches Institut-Abteilung Rom), the British School at Rome and the Swedish Institute in Rome (Svenska Institutet i Rom) for the literature review on which this thesis project is primarily based. Similarly, a one-year replacement grant (#365-60-010) awarded by the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (Nederlandse Organisatie voor Wetenschappelijk Onderzoek - NWO), has been invaluable for finalising the thesis (although due to certain circumstances admittedly not on the conditions agreed). A number of people have supported me over the years in one way or another, for which I am truly grateful. I'd like to mention the following people (please forgive me any omissions): Suzanne van Rosenberg, Alice Samson, Gerrit Dusseldorp, Marjolijn Kok, Miguel-John Versluys, Alexander Verpoorte, Roswitha Manning, Karsten Wentink, Els Koeneman, Tjaco Mast, Hans Kamermans, Olga Yates, Hanna Stoeger, Peter van Dommelen, David Fontijn, Piet van de Velde, Eva Kaptijn, Leon van Hoof, Luc Amkreutz, Jimmy Mans, Stijn Arnoldussen, Arne Wossink, Welmoed Out, Geeske Langejans, Tesse Stek, Nathalie de Haan, Bouke van der Meer, Aniek Abbink (†) and last but not least my supervisors, Harry Fokkens and Raymond Corbey. My vow has been pledged to Academia.

Curriculum vitae

Erik van Rosenberg (1974) holds an MA in Theory and Methods in Archaeology (1992-1999) from the Faculty of Archaeology, Leiden University, and he used to be assistant librarian of the same faculty (1997-2010).
