Acknowledgements

I have received tremendous guidance and support from colleagues, friends and family members, who encouraged and helped me through this struggling yet fruitful journey. I am thankful to all of them, from whom I benefit a lot.

First of all, I give my heartfelt gratitude to my supervisors, Prof. Reinout Vriesendorp and Prof. Matthias Haentjens, who coached me with their broad knowledge and rich experience and led me to the academic world. Many thanks also go to Prof. Bob Wessels, who has always been supportive during my PhD times and provided me with a variety of research opportunities; to Prof. Qingjiang Kong, who first introduced me to the topic of bank resolution and encouraged me at the beginning to pursue an academic career; to Prof. Jay Westbrook who generously welcomed and guided me in Austin, where we had lively discussions about US law and acted as one of my doctorate committee members. I must thank also my other doctorate committee members, Prof. Jingxia Shi, Prof. Ignacio Tirado, and Prof. Sierd Schaafsma, who offered their precious time and efforts to read my manuscript and gave their insightful comments.

I am grateful to all the colleagues I met during various conferences and workshops, who provided me with valuable comments on my research. I have mentioned all their names in each chapter. I thank all my colleagues from the Private Law Institute, in particular, of the Company Law Department and Hazelhoff Centre for Financial Law, for creating a stimulating working environment. My appreciation also goes to my friends in the Netherlands, who have been a lot of help since I first arrived in Leiden, and living alone in a foreign country could not have been done without them.

Last but not least, I thank my parents, who are always confident in me and supported me financially and emotionally when I lived in the Netherlands. I am truly indebted to them, and this dissertation could never have been accomplished without their love.
