Acknowledgements

My first and most sincere thanks goes to my promotor and supervisor Prof. Jan Kolen, who's deep love for landscape, nature, history, philosophy, art and archaeology has been a source of great inspiration. I also thank my second promotors Prof. Hans Renes and Prof. Hannes Palang, who took time to read the manuscript and give their feedback on the history of landscape studies. My deepest gratitude goes to Prof. Willem Willems, who guided me to academic study of heritage management, but unfortunately passed away during my stay at Leiden University.

I want to thank my friend Tõnis in the National Archives of Estonia for helping me with the historical maps, Corrie Bakels for the advice in managing pollen data, Heiki Valk for the opportunity to use the archaeology databases of University of Tartu, Tõnno Jonuks for the fruitful discussions on natural sacred sites, and my colleagues at the National Heritage Board and Estonian University of Life Sciences for constantly asking about my progress on the thesis. I am also grateful for the constructive comments of Prof. Valter Lang and Prof. David Fontijn, who reviewed the final manuscript.

Ady and Eduardo – thank you for your help with sorting out the final things!

Last but not least, I thank my family: my wife and best friend Ester, parents Marlit and Enn, and my sister Mariko. Without your support I would have never succeeded. Aitäh, et olete olemas!

Curriculum Vitae

Martti Veldi was born in 1981 in Tartu, Estonia. After graduating from Tartu Miina Härma Gümnaasium in 2000 he started studying history and archaeology at the University of Tartu. Veldi obtained both, his BA (2004) and MA (2009) degrees from the Chair of Archaeology, Department of History, University of Tartu. His MA thesis Centres and Communication in South-Eastern Estonia during the Iron Age in the context of Early Modern Era maps explored the opportunities of interpreting Iron Age communication combining 17th century maps and data on archaeological sites.

During 2007–2011 Martti worked as a senior inspector of archaeological monuments in South Estonia for the Estonian National Heritage Board. In 2011 Veldi was enrolled as a PhD student at the Faculty of Archaeology, Leiden University.

Since 2015, he has been employed as an advisor of archaeological heritage at the Estonian National Heritage Board. He is also currently a lecturer of restauration of historic sites and monuments at the Chair of Landscape Architecture, Estonian University of Life Sciences.
