Curriculum Vitae

Gulnaz Sibgatullina was born on 23 April 1992 in Yelabuga, a town in the Republic of Tatarstan, Russia. In 2009 she went to study International Relations with German and English as foreign languages at Moscow State Linguistic University. She obtained her Specialist Diploma (recognized as an MA degree) with distinction in 2014. During her studies, she went abroad for an exchange semester (2012-2013) at Johannes Gutenberg University in Mainz, Germany, where she followed modules in Political Science as well as Persian and Turkish language courses.

In August 2014 she became a PhD candidate at Leiden University Centre for Linguistics (LUCL), working as a member of the research project “The Russian Language of Islam”, funded by the Netherlands Organization for Scientific Research (NWO). In 2015 she was awarded a fellowship for library research and travelled to the Russian, East European, and Eurasian Center (REEEC) at the University of Illinois, USA. In 2016 she was a visiting fellow at the School of Literatures, Languages and Cultures at the University of Edinburgh, which was made possible by a Leiden University Fund fellowship.

Between 2014 and 2018 she also lectured on Russian language acquisition, sociolinguistics and Russia’s domestic politics at Leiden University and gave guest lectures at the University of Amsterdam and the European University in St. Petersburg.
