I arrived in Leiden in 1992 to study Buddhism under the late Prof. Tilmann Vetter. My plan at the time was to investigate the Vigrahavyāvartanī attributed to Nāgārjuna. This was my first experience living abroad and my research lost focus and I was unable to complete my thesis.

In 1997 I returned to Japan where I joined the Institute for Comprehensive Studies of Buddhism at Taisho University. At that time the institute, in cooperation with relevant organizations in the People's Republic of China, was engaged in several projects focused on the publication of Sanskrit manuscripts held in Tibet. I was fortunate to be able to participate in a number of these projects. In July 1997, the institute organized a study tour to Lhasa and Beijing. While in Beijing I was able to visit the National Library of China located within the Cultural Palace of Nationalities. It was there that I noticed the existence of the MS that is the focus of the present study. In March of 1998, I visited the library again and began a project to produce a facsimile edition of the dBu med MSS. This project was realized in 1999. I saw a printed copy of the facsimile edition for the first time at a hotel in Lhasa during the second visit of the institute's delegation team. While on this visit, I was also able to see important Sanskrit MSS of the Vimalakīrtinirdeśa, the Prasannapadā, the Madhyamakāvatārabhāṣya, and so on preserved in Potala Palace.

For almost two decades, I have struggled with the texts included in the dBu med MSS. In this thesis I provide diplomatic and critical editions for a portion of these works. However, the result has not always been satisfactory. For instance, I have to admit that I have not yet been able to provide full translations of the texts in the present study.

I owe many people a debt of gratitude for their help in the present work. I obtained much important information and advice from Prof. Dr. Ernst Steinkellner, Prof. Dr. Christina Scherrer-Schaub, Prof. Dr. Saitō Akira, Prof. Dr. Yoshimizu Chizuko, Prof. Dr. Tanemura Ryūgen, and Prof. Dr. Kanō Kazuo.

In addition, I would like to thank the late Prof. Matsunami Yoshihiro, who was not only of great assistance in providing me the opportunity to study in Leiden but who also took the initiative in the publication project of the dBu med MSS during his presidency of Taisho university. From the bottom of my heart, I extend my gratitude to him and also to the following people: the late Rev. Saitō Kōjun, Rev. Kimura Takayasu, Prof. Takahashi Hisao, the late Rev. Maeda Takashi (Ryōdō), the late Rev. Matsunami Yasuo, Rev. Suzuki Kōshin, Dr. Nagashima Jundō, Dr. Kuranishi Ken'ichi, and my seniors and colleagues from the Bonbungaku Kenkyūshitu (Sanskrit Study Course) of Taisho University. My research owes a great deal to a great many people at the Institute for Comprehensive Studies of Buddhism at Taisho University. I would especially like to thank the late Prof. Dr. Tada Koshō, Rev. Tada Kōbun, Prof. Dr. Ōtsuka Nobuo, Prof. Noguchi Keiya, and Prof. Kimura Shūjō, all of whom have contributed to the joint research of Sanskrit MSS.

At the Naritasan Institute for Buddhist Studies, the late abbot Rev. Tsurumi Shōken, the present abbot Rev. Hashimoto Shōjin, Prof. Dr. Matsumoto Shōkei, Prof. Watanabe Shigeaki, Dr. Yaita Hideomi, along with many others, have provided me the invaluable opportunity of publishing my papers. I am grateful that I was able to publish my papers in their journal. I appreciate their kindness and support.

I am deeply indebted to Dr. Bergljot Chiarucci for checking my English carefully.

It is impossible for me to express the full extent of my gratitude here, however, I would like to thank my wife Asami for her support.

Abstract

The present thesis is composed of an introduction to and a critical edition of a twelfth century collection of notes largely on the Madhyamaka treatises of Candrakīrti. This collection of notes is here provisionally called the Lakṣaṇatīkā* (LT*). The first part of the thesis introduces the LT*, addressing six basic questions: (1) What are the contents of the text? (2) who compiled it? (3) when was it compiled? (4) where was it compiled? (5) how was it compiled? and (6) for what purpose was it compiled? I have elsewhere provided the following tentative answers to a few of these questions: A Tibetan scholar named Dharmakīrti compiled the LT* at Vikramaśīla monastery in India, around the beginning of 12th century CE.

The first part of the thesis not only gives further information on the compiler and his associates, but it also looks at the remaining questions, namely, (1) what are the contents of the text? (5) how was it compiled? and (6) for what purpose was it compiled? In the Introduction, the contents of the LT* are summarized. The rest of the questions are addressed in Part I.

The first chapter of Part I looks at who compiled these notes and when and where they were compiled. The second chapter seeks answers to how and for what purpose the text was compiled. In addition, the chapter looks at why this particular set of notes was copied and brought to Tibet. In the course of discussion I point out that the LT* is as an important twelfth century textual source for Madhyamaka studies centered on Candrakīrti. Hence, Part I offers a general yet fairly detailed introduction to the LT*.

Part II, the main body of the thesis, is a critical edition of the LT*, in which the words and phrases occurring in the mūla treatises are identified. Although no translation of the text is given, I hope this edition will provide groundwork for future research into the 12th century Madhyamaka school.

Furthermore, the present thesis contains collation tables of the LT*, the diplomatic transliteration, and the photo images of the LT* MS as appendices.

Much of the present thesis consists of revised and expanded versions of papers previously published by the present author.
