I wrote this dissertation over many years and was assisted by many people, both mentally and financially. First of all, my teachers at the Department of Political Science of Hallym University in Korea never stopped encouraging me whenever I confronted another obstacle. Specifically, Professor Yang Kiwoong showed great kindness and concern for me. I express my deepest gratitude to my teachers. I also want to warmly thank my former academic advisor, Professor emeritus of Seoul National University Kim Hongwoo, for his unfailing interest and trust in my study. He has been my teacher and mentor ever since I attended his reading group of The Independent when I was a Master's student. Without his continuous support and encouragement, I might not have been able to finish this dissertation. Professor John Dunn at Cambridge University was another scholar who showed incessant confidence in me. His help in finding a way out when I faced a dead end has been crucial to the completion of this long journey. The only way that I can repay his help will be to prove myself a good scholar. At Leiden, Dr. Koen De Ceuster and Professor Remco Breuker generously allowed me to rethink my dissertation. Specifically, Dr. De Ceuster, my immediate supervisor, made many suggestions that helped me improve my dissertation. His insights in historiography were an inspiration to me.

I have been greatly encouraged by many friends during my PhD study. Reverend Dr. Kim Younghwan and Mrs. Kim showed me boundless love. Their concerns and prayers helped me endure my lonely life. Professor Yi Jonghyun was a true mentor to me throughout the entire period of my PhD work. Thanks to his endless encouragement and generous advice, I could overcome a number of problems I faced during the writing process. I fondly remember, Basil and Shirley Scott, an elderly couple who made my stay in Cambridge all the more memorable. I have fond memories of my friends Jenny, David, Jeremy, and Chiu of Holy Trinity Church; Dr. Ignacio Bresco from Spain; Dr. Zhang Cheng from China; Dr. Yi Ponghyun, Dr. Nam Juhyun, Kim Donggyu, Yi Kyungmin, Dr. Yim Sanghun, and Dr. Park Jongseok from Korea.

Lastly, I want to express my gratitude to my family. They endured many years of toil while I was doing this research. If there is any achievement in this dissertation, it is because of my family's devotion to me. This dissertation is dedicated to them.
