ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The start of this work lies many years back: its first seeds were sown during a course on History of the Middle East during my undergraduate studies at Nijmegen University in the 1980s. Contrary to what one would expect this was not because the young professor teaching the course caught my attention with interesting stories on Ottoman women. In fact, he completely ignored them and did not refer to them at all. As an anthropology student taking courses on gender and participating in workshops on women's studies, this caused not only my eyebrows to be raised, also my interest was awoken. If there were any women in the Ottoman Empire – and, of course, there were – then why were they invisible? I asked the young professor if I could write a paper on Ottoman women for the course instead of taking an exam. He allowed me to do so. Thus started my venture into the lives of Ottoman women.

Over the years, I ended up digging deeper and deeper into Ottoman women's worlds. From the paper for the course on Ottoman women in general to my MA-thesis (doctoraalscriptie) on Ottoman women between 1838 and 1938 to this work on the organizational life of Ottoman Muslim women during the Second Constitutional Period (1908-1918).

During the more than twenty years I spent on my research, the way I did my research changed thoroughly not in the least due to the technological developments which occurred. From leafing through hundreds of yellowed and bristle pages of old newspapers in even older libraries to online reading of those same newspapers in the comfort of my study at home. From painstakingly hand copying the relevant articles with a pencil to using the hand copiers brought by Japanese colleagues with their meters long strips of paper which had to be cut in pieces and reassembled at home; from copying texts by typing them at my first laptop to making digital photographs of the relevant articles to classify them later at my computer; and more recently, through simply reading the papers at home in my study after having downloaded the relevant pages, whole issues or even whole series of newspapers and periodicals.

Online catalogues formed another feature facilitating my work as an armchair scholar of the digital age bound to her study room. Relevant materials were found looking through the catalogues of the Prime-Ministerial Archives and the archives of the Red Crescent: a few emails and they arrived at my home.

These developments opened for me the opportunity to pick up my research where I left it many years ago since the need to go and actually spend weeks or even months in a library or archive no longer exists. Having said this I do look back in fond memory at the long days spent at Millet Kütüphanesi, Beyazıt Devlet Kütüphanesi, Atatürk Kitaplığı, Hakkı Tarık Us Kütüphanesi, and the Prime-Ministerial Ottoman Archives, all in Istanbul, or Bursa İl Halk Kütüphanesi in Bursa and Milli Kütüphane in Ankara. I am indebted to all the friendly people working at these institutions as well as to the fellow researchers I met during my quest for new and hitherto unrevealed sources. Many of them turned into friends during the discussions we had over many meals and even more glasses of wine or beer in the bars and meyhanes of Istanbul.

I also had the chance of working at Atria, Institute on Gender Equality and Women's History (the former Aletta) in the Netherlands, and the Library of Smith College, Northampton, Massachusetts. Without receiving the Margaret Storrs Grierson Research Award, it would not have been possible to spend a month working on the Sophia Smith Collection of the latter library. Twice (1987-1988 and 1990-1991) I also received a grant from the Turkish Government in the context of a bi-lateral agreement between the Netherlands and Turkey. My research was further financed with two grants from the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO): one in 1987-1988 to explore the possibilities of doing research on Ottoman women in preparation of writing a research proposal and another one (1990 – 1995) to work as a researcher at Nijmegen University (now, Radboud University Nijmegen).

Nijmegen University is my Alma Mater and the university from where I began my explorations into the worlds of Ottoman women, but during the many years of my research I also worked at Koç University and Bilgi University both in Istanbul and, most recently, at Leiden University. I am indebted to my colleagues at these institutions for the support they gave me over the years: without their continuous encouragement this work would probably never have been finished. At the tail-end of this project I could not have done without the assistance of my para-nimfs, Anneke Voeten and Martin Baasten, and Gé Helsen, who not only designed the cover of this work, but also helped me out with technical details.

Most important for me, though, was the continuous support of my family, my parents, Jo and Thea van Os, my husband, Tekin Kutlubay and our daughter, Micha Merve van Os, with whom I could spend less quality time than we both wanted due to my research.

Ooh, and by the way, I am sure the young professor of those days at present is more knowledgeable on Ottoman women than he could ever have hoped for.
