Acknowledgements

I was fortunate to have many supporting people around me while I was writing this dissertation. Their advice, feedback and encouragement were essential in all stages of the process. First of all, I wish to thank my fellow PhD students (some of them turned doctors by now) at the department of Film and Literary Studies in Leiden throughout the past years: Maria Boletsi, my current office mate who I am thankful for offering a listening ear and many uplifting talks on writing and teaching, Yanfeng Bian, Aleks Alaettin Carikci, Eric Chen, Colin van Heezik, Jacqueline Hylkema, Itandehui Jansen, Looi van Kessel, Jessie Kuo, Stefan van der Lecq, Tracy Lee, Fatemeh Sobhi, Mohammed Tariq, and the late Thera Giezen, whom I remember with a deep sense of loss.

With most of these PhD students, I participated in the Leiden theory seminar between 2008 and 2012. This seminar not only provided a fruitful ground for discussion, but also helped me to push my academic skills, thinking and writing to new levels, as well as new directions. The seminar's participants –among which Niels Cornelissen, Doris Einsiedel and Daan Wesselman – deserve many thanks for the attentive readings, presentations, discussions, and exchange of ideas that turned the seminar into a stimulating environment as well as a productive escape from the solitude that writing a dissertation brings with it.

I particularly want to thank the seminar's organizer and my supervisor, Ernst van Alpen, for his inspirational guidance, insightful comments and his enduring support of my work. My project is greatly indebted to his thinking and scholarly work. I also thank my co-supervisor Peter Verstraten, whose knowledge and ideas have been indispensable to starting up and realizing this study. My project has benefited from his detailed comments, as well as his persistent questioning of the structure of my dissertation, which has been a valuable reminder to not to lose track of the connecting thread of my chapters.

In Leiden, I have been trained, advised and guided by the staff of the Department of Film- and Literary Studies, a group of incredibly talented scholars and inspired teachers with, not unimportantly, great senses of humor. Thanks to these supportive and warmhearted colleagues, I feel very much at home at in Leiden. Therefore, I wish to express my gratitude to all the staff members at the department, some of whom I have not yet mentioned in the above: Eric de Bruyn, Pepita Hesselberth, Isabel Hoving, Madeleine Kasten, Frans-Willem Korsten, Liesbeth Minnaard, recently, Astrid van Weyenberg, and Yasco Horsman, whom I specifically thank for his insightful comments on the third chapter of this dissertation.

For the institutional and financial support of my project, I am grateful to the Leiden University Centre of Arts in Society (LUCAS). Because of their support I was able to participate in several seminars and conferences abroad, and to visit international film- and video art festivals as well as exhibitions. In addition, LUCAS provides a stimulating academic interdisciplinary environment at Leiden University, not in the least place by supporting the monthly PhD lunch which was initiated in 2011 by the PhD council, chaired by Sara Polak. A special thanks to Lia ten Brink and Viola Stoop from the secretary's office of LUCAS for always being tremendously helpful and kind.

In 2007-2008 I had the opportunity to participate in the ASCA (Amsterdam School for Cultural Analysis) theory seminar which was founded by Mieke Bal, and was co-organized by Murat Aydemir, Hanneke Grootenboer, Mireille Rosello and Sudeep Dasgupta. The seminar formed an inspirational and challenging surrounding for me when I took my first steps into the academic world. I wish to thank the organizers and participants of the seminar, as well as the participants and organizers of the annual ASCA workshop, in which I participated as a chair in 2013. A special thanks goes to Hanneke Grootenboer, who advised and supported me in the initial stages of my project, and helped me to refine the outline of my research. In the final stages of my project, Mieke Bal did me the great and generous favor of reading my dissertation meticulously. I am very grateful for her insightful and detailed comments on my manuscript.

My research project would have been impossible without the many artists and staff members at galleries, museums and distribution companies who have been so kind to provide me with DVD's and/or answers to many of my technical, practical and theoretical questions on films and videos. I wish to express my sincere gratitude to Michelle Citron, David Claerbout, Matthias Girardet, Douglas Gordon, Vanalyne Green, Lynn Hershman-Leeson, Christoph Müller, Hester Scheurwater, Fiona Tan and Krassimir Terziev. I also thank Electronic Arts Intermix (New York), Frith Street Gallery (London), Gagosian Gallery (London), Gallery Micheline Szwajzer (Antwerp), Love Streams Productions (Paris), Tate Modern (London), and the Video Data Bank (Chicago) for their assistance.

It is hard to imagine this project without those friends and family members who were not directly involved in this research project, but whose encouragement and company were crucial forces of motivation. Thank you Sophie Noordman, for being such good and patient friend, for always staying around (the corner, literally) during the times I disappeared behind books. I thank my dear friends Jikke Jordans and Jan Marten Molenaar – both of whom are so very well able to put things in perspective – for their support and for many enjoyable discussions over lovely dinners. Some friends have taught me a lot by sharing their practical skills and love of art, design, photography, film or video with me: Els Castelijns, Roos Koole, Annika Lems, Mieke van der Velden, Ingrid Verhoeven; your work is an inspiration. Thank you all for keeping in touch over the years despite busy lives and, in some cases, long distances between us.

During some difficult times in the last couple of years I was not only supported by friends, but also by my large family. A warm thanks goes to my big hub of nieces and nephews, to my in-laws, and to my aunts and uncles. A special place in this group belongs to my uncle Toon Jiran, with whom I share – amongst other things – a fondness of television series, and whose creativity, inventiveness and wit are an example to me. Another person who deserves credit is my grandmother, the now-deceased Ludmila Vera Jiran-Pavlu; a tiny woman with a big heart and great strength of character. My heartfelt gratitude goes to my wise and caring godmother, Mia ten Hengel. Thank you also to Karoli Houwen, for being there for me, my kids and my dad. Thank you Anna Houwen, for designing this book (and many other things) for me, and for being such a helpful source of knowledge on film and video (and many other things) to me. A special thanks also goes to Ilse, Arno, Isis and Silas Peene for their hospitality, of which I often even benefited while staying at home.

Words cannot capture my gratitude to my parents, Jac Houwen and Mila Houwen-Jiran. Their love, unconditional support and belief in me are my backbone, and will always keep me going. Although my mother did not live to see this dissertation finished, I would not have started this project nor have finished it without her strength or her many loving, encouraging words, which stay with me. I thank my father for not only being a great dad, but also a loving grandfather who, despite his own sorrows, has taken great care of my children when I was in the final stages of completing this study.

It is to my children, Midas and Anna Jansen, that I wish to dedicate this book. They were born during the years that I was writing this dissertation. Without them, this study may have been completed sooner and with less sleep deprivation. However, life would simply not have been as good as it is with my sweet freckle-faced son and funny fair-haired daughter around. Building lego castles, finger-painting, singing Christmas carols in springtime, listening to self-invented toddler jokes; I cannot think of better ways to get through writer's blocks or deal with stressful periods of nearing deadlines.

My final words of gratitude are for my husband Erik, who is the most energetic person in my life, but also the one who has guarded the peace and quiet in our home. Thank you for believing in me, for loving me, and for giving me all the possible time and space to work on this project. Thank you for riding the roller-coaster of life with me without fear, and for putting me back on my feet back whenever I was dangling upside down in the air the last couple of years.

Curriculum Vitae

Janna Houwen was born on May 28, 1982 in Eindhoven, the Netherlands. After finishing her secondary education in 2000 at the van Maerlant Lyceum in Eindhoven, she studied visual art (specialization painting) at the Royal Academy of Fine Art in The Hague, the Netherlands, where she graduated in 2005. For her graduation show, she received the Stroom incentive prize for young artists.

Parallel to her education at the Royal Academy, she enrolled in the BA-program of the Department of Comparative Literature in Leiden in 2002. At Leiden University, she received a bachelor's degree in Comparative Literature in 2006, and a research master's degree in 2007, both cum laude.

In September 2007, she received a PhD position at Leiden University Centre for the Arts in Society (LUCAS). During her doctoral research, she had the opportunity to teach at the Department of Film and Literary Studies in Leiden, and to visit several international conferences and symposia in Leiden, Amsterdam, Lisbon, Cologne and Northampton. Janna has published on Michael Haneke, humor theory and film, and is currently a member of the editorial board of the Journal of the Leiden Graduate Conference .
