Acknowledgements

This dissertation owes a lot to my supervisors Anikó Lipták and Lisa Cheng. Without their help and support, this thesis would not be what it is. Anikó's shared interests and inspiring enthusiasm about linguistics combined with Lisa's punctuality and eye for detail have led to significant improvements. I thank Kyle Johnson, whom, during my visit at UMass in Amherst, was kind enough to acquaint me with the town and to grant me much of his time to discuss my work. I also thank Jeroen van Craenenbroeck for his comments on the entire manuscript. I'm in debt to Lee Armishaw, James Griffiths, Allison Kirk and Gary Thoms for help with the English data, as well as the discussions that these data have sometimes led to. Writing this thesis would not have been as much fun if it weren't for my office mates Sara Lusini and Lena Karvovskaya and my office neighbors Laura Migliori and Giuseppe Torcollaci with whom I had the pleasure to engage in many conversations and discussions about life and language. Likewise, I have enjoyed spending time talking about life and linguistics with Marta Castella, Allison Kirk, Marieke Meelen and Bobby Ruijgrok. Needless to say, there are many others who have somehow influenced this work. Although they might not be too many to mention here, they are certainly too many for me to mention without almost certainly forgetting someone. To avoid this risk, a sincere yet collective thank you to all of you.

The research for this book was carried out as part of the VIDI-project 'Focus and ellipsis', funded by the Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO), awarded to dr. Anikó Lipták (project nr. 276-70-016).
