Curriculum Vitae

Darryl Eric Robinson was born 17 May 1971, in Thompson, Manitoba Canada. He received his LLB in Law at the University of Western Ontario (1994), where he was President's Scholar and received the Gold Medal (top student in the program). Prior to that, he did two years' study of philosophy at the University of Western Ontario, where he had the top standing in the Faculty of Arts. He received his LL.M in Law New York University School of Law (2002), where he was a Hauser Global Scholar, and received the Jerome Lipper Award for outstanding achievement in the International Legal Studies Program.

Darryl clerked at the Supreme Court of Canada (1996). He then served as a Legal Officer at Foreign Affairs Canada (1997-2004), working in international human rights, humanitarian and criminal law. His work in the creation of the International Criminal Court and in the development of Canada's new crimes against humanity legislation earned him a Minister's Citation and a Minister's Award for Foreign Policy Excellence.

From 2004 to 2006, he joined the International Criminal Court as an adviser to the Chief Prosecutor. From 2006 to 2008, he was a Fellow, Adjunct Professor and Acting Director of the International Human Rights Clinic at the University of Toronto Faculty of Law. He joined Queen's University Faculty of Law in July 2008. He is currently an Associate Professor, teaching criminal law, international criminal law, and international human rights law.

Darryl was the 2013-14 recipient of the Antonio Cassese Prize for International Criminal Legal Studies. His writings on international criminal law focus on criminal law theory, crimes against humanity, and complementarity. His research seeks to develop a humanistic system of international justice, which is fair in its treatment of individuals, mindful of competing societal goals, and inclusive of diverse global perspectives.

In 2013, Darryl became an external PhD candidate of Leiden Law of Leiden University, under the supervision of Prof. Carsten Stahn, with co-supervisors Giulia Pinzauti and Joseph Powderly.
