Acknowledgements

A study of this magnitude is hardly ever conducted by just one person. Over the years, I received help and advice from countless people. First and foremost, I would like to thank my promotor Prof. Dr. Corinne Hofman, head of the Caribbean Research Group at the Faculty of Archaeology, Leiden University. She has given me continuous advice and guidance over the years, and made available the necessary funds to carry out the research, without which this study would never have been possible. Furthermore, she has been instrumental in my development as an all-round Caribbean archaeologist by inviting me to several of her excavation projects throughout the region. Thanks also to my co-promotors Mark Hauser, associate professor at the Department of Anthropology at Northwestern University, and Robert Parthesius, associate professor of Heritage Studies at NYU Abu Dhabi, for their help, advice, and constructive comments on the drafts of the dissertation. I would like to thank Gay Soetekouw, close friend and President of the St. Eustatius Center for Archaeological Research (SECAR). She has supported my research and professional career on St. Eustatius in numerous ways during the past seven years. Her continuous support and enthusiasm for Statia's archaeology have been instrumental in keeping SECAR operational even during the most difficult times. The fieldwork would never have been so pleasant, safe, and effective without the great staff at Scubaqua Dive Center who assisted with the diving and geophysical surveys: Mike Harterink, Marieke van de Wetering, Menno Walther, Ingrid Walther, Thijs Aberson, Noortje de Boer, Laura Aubac, and Vincent Bourcier. Mike Harterink took many beautiful photos during the fieldwork campaigns, for which I am very grateful. I am also greatly indebted to Anna Brodrecht for her elaborate constructive comments on the draft of this dissertation, which improved the text tremendously. Last, I would like to thank Richard Grant Gilmore III, former island archaeologist of St. Eustatius and co-founder of SECAR. He introduced me to the island and provided me with many opportunities to conduct research. Much of the knowledge I gained from working with him forms the foundation of this study.
