The Syriac Churches in Iraq

Numbers

Christians formed two to four percent of the total population of Iraq. While the amount of Christians has sometimes been believed to be higher, official estimates and censuses from the period 1920–1950 are consistent in this figure.¹

Demographic information divided by church and locations is scattered over various sources and comes without accountability. This information is likely to come from the churches themselves, but on the whole the numbers from different sources are not completely consistent with each other. The numbers give some insight into the division of the Christians over the churches and over the country, however.

Numbers from the Dominican mission (tables A.1, A.2, and A.3)

These tables are representations of tables found in Bibliothèque du Saulchoir, Z-91, Statistiques et recensements Iraq 1935. The formulations inside the tables are literal translations from French. The percentages were added by myself. No sources are given in this document.

¹See the statistical information reproduced by Hannah Müller-Sommerfeld, Staatliche Religionspolitik im Irak gegenüber Juden, Assyrischen Christen und Bahá'í (1920–1958), 284.

Race	Number	Percentage
Arabs (Muslims, Christians, Jews, Sabeans)	3,410,000	80.7%
Kurds (Muslims, Christians, Sabeans)	750,000	17.8%
Turkmens (Muslims)	65,000	1.5%
Total	4,225,000	100.0%

Numbers from the Iraq Directory of 1936 (table A.4)

The English-language Iraq Directory of 1936 offers some pages with general information about the “Iraqi Communities,” which includes the Jews, Chaldeans, Syrian Catholics, “Orthodox Syrians,” Carmelites, Sabeans, and Yezidis. The Assyrians are left out here, although they are featured at other places in the book. The sections on the Chaldeans, Syriac Catholic and Syriac Orthodox Christians offer some statistical information.

The numbers about the Chaldean Catholic Church are presented as a table and offer numbers per diocese and are presented in table A.4. The Syrian Catholics are only divided into those who live in the north of the country (20,000) and the rest (5000, adding up to 25,000). The only demographic information provided about the Syriac Orthodox is that their number in Iraq is 12,000.

Church	Number	Percentage
Chaldean Catholic Church	81,703	54.4%
Amadia	4,531
Aqra	1,567
Baghdad	29,883

Conclusions

The amount of Chaldeans according to the Iraq Directory of 1936 (98,800) is more or less the same as the total amount of Christians in Iraq according to the 1935 census, which is impossible. In addition

Location	Number
Chaldean Catholic Church
Baghdad	20,085
Mosul	41,699
Basrah, Amara, and Kut	7,000
Zakho and Dohuk	11,146
Amadiyah	5,985
Kirkuk	9,685
Aqra	2,400
Total	98,000

Table A.4: Christians in Iraq according to the Iraq Directory of 1936 to that, the numbers of the Chaldeans, Syriac Catholic and Syriac Orthodox in the Iraq Dictionary of 1936 are all higher than in the Dominican figures from 1947, while the censuses show that in this period the total amount of Christians had risen together with the general population. Nevertheless, the distribution of the Christians according to the churches is more or less consistent.

The figures convincingly show that the great amount of the Syriac Christians lived in the north, especially in Mosul or in its vicinities. For the Chaldean Catholic Church, however, Baghdad was of growing importance, with over than a third belonging to the Baghdad diocese in 1947. Baghdad was also an important city for the Assyrian Church of the East from the beginning.

The churches

The following tables provide an overview of general information about the four Syriac churches in Iraq. Here, “National/ethnic identification” and “Group/tā’ifa identification” are according to my interpretation of what identifications are generally visible.
