Note on the Documentation

The documents found in this section are largely unedited or unpublished, but those that have already been published in Spanish are accompanied by a footnote stating the name, author and year of the publication at the beginning of each document. Where possible, the page number (Fol.) in the bundle will be cited, with 'v' denoting the overleaf. However some documents have no folio numbers because the pages of the documents were not numbered (for example in the AHN, nobility section, Hospital de Tavera, Toledo). An attempt has been made to translate everything to English. However, the reader should take into account the difficulties of translating sixteenth- and seventeenth-century Spanish into modern English. Also, I have tried to be accurate, but as I am not a professional translator or linguist, the translation in some cases can only be an approximation of the original meaning. Furthermore, some words have lost their meaning over time and are not defined in the historic dictionaries. Therefore it was necessary to include the transcribed original Spanish text in this survey. Italicised Spanish words in curved brackets in the translations are explained in the Glossary. (vol. 1. pp. 263-76). When a word was illegible it will be noted as [...] or when the meaning or translation was not clear as [?]. Brief biographies and any other comments and clarifications in the translations are placed between square brackets. Indications of currency (ducados, reales, etc), and measurements and weights are left cursive in Spanish and are explained in the Glossary. The transcription follows the original documents. Therefore, the interchangeable v and b, the g and j, the ç for z and many more have been copied as written from the original. For a discussion of the consulted Archives and their contents, see part 1, pp. 73-81. It goes without saying that the documents presented here are only a selection from the voluminous archival material still extant, but that care has been taken to focus on some of the most relevant documents from this period. The documents are organized in chronological order but the Archives of the Nobility (Toledo), Medina Sidonia (Cádiz) and Medinaceli (Seville and Toledo) are also arranged chronologically within each lineage or nobility title.
