Title: Reeds in the wind of change: Zulu sangomas in transition

Issue date: 2021-03-30

Curriculum Vitae

Gerda Jeanette Hooghordel was born in Ermelo, the Netherlands in 1962. She graduated from high school in Harderwijk in 1980. In 1988 she obtained her propaedeutic diploma at the social academy and her MSc in Theology from Utrecht University (the Netherlands) in 1996. In 2003 she completed the first-degree teacher training course in Religion and Philosophy of Life. Since 2009 she worked on her PhD research on Zulu sangomas in South Africa.

In addition to her studies, Gerda always worked in various positions. First in hospital St Jansdal, Harderwijk, HRM administration and acting head of Admission and Surgery Planning (from 1982 to 2003). As a student assistant at the Department of Social Sciences and Religious Studies of the Catholic Theological University of Utrecht 1993-1996. Later as mentor and teacher of religion and philosophy at a secondary school (CCNV) in Harderwijk (2003 to 2018). Currently, she works independently as an existential counsellor from her company 'Zinnig gesprek' (Meaningful conversation).

Acknowledgements

'It takes a village to raise a child' is an African expression indicating the significance of a community in children's upbringing. The realisation of this study is alike; it would not have been completed (perhaps not even started) without the help and support of many people, in South Africa and the Netherlands.

In South Africa I wish to thank the cooperating indigenous healers, for their hospitality and open attitude towards me. Mks Bhengu, Mks Mbuyisa and Mks Ngidi kindly agreed to be interviewed about their healing practice. These conversations turned out to be as much about their personal experiences, opinions and belief. Baba Cele unfolded a small part of the muthi (trade) world. Baba Hlongwane opened doors to NUPAATHPSA's eThekweni branch. Mks Gasa, Mks Dudu and Mks Zinhle allowed me to attend healing rituals, at their compound and elsewhere. Mks Mkhize explained the application of muthi. I sincerely appreciate their involvement and hope they will not feel betrayed in their confidence when they come to know the outcome.

More people in South Africa have contributed to this study. I thank Louise, Brenda, Phumzile and Constance for delightful lodgings, the UKZN IsiZulu department's staff and the Killie Campbell Collection's librarians for support. I thank Mr Mbele, for permitting me to use his healing procedure as a connecting thread.

Finally, Bongani Ntshangase my key informant, who introduced me to sangomas and familiarised me with many subjects somehow related to indigenous healing. In doing so, he showed me what is going on in indigenous healthcare nowadays. I am greatly indebted to him for his sound support and contribution to this study. Accordingly, it is my wish to dedicate this book to his memory.

It is impossible to acknowledge everyone in the Netherlands that supported me in my research and writing of this book. Nevertheless, hoping that those not mentioned will know that I thankfully remember their encouragement, I would like to thank the following:

Firstly, my family and friends, and all those around me for their understanding, for giving me the opportunity and time to accomplish this project.

My sincere appreciation to my supervisors; Professor Rijk van Dijk, who reminded me that a thesis like this has always room for improvement, and Professor Wouter van Beek who kindly coached and encouraged me through the years of literature study, fieldwork and writing. I will always remember our multiple conversations at his home. Assuming that, in reference to Nigerian philosopher Sophie Oluwole (2017), wisdom is shown in the combination of knowledge and human experience, I regard him as a truly wise man. My appreciation to Professor Gerrie ter Haar, who encouraged me to take up research, and inspired me time and again. I thank the support staff and library staff at the ASCL for their expertise and helping me out in many ways.

Thanks to my former colleagues of the departments of Religious Education and Philosophy for standing in for me during my study leave to write this thesis. I am greatly indebted to Sarah Koopmans-Binti Amzah, who read the manuscript and coached me on the bumpy path of writing in English.

I am grateful to Mieke Moor and Warner Boer for 'walks and talks', for endorsing me to draw the line, for remaining friends. Finally, I owe a debt of gratitude to Lilian van de Kraats, for taking care of fieldwork photographs and recordings, for unrelenting encouragement, for being a sounding board, and most of all for being by my side.
