Thanks and acknowledgments

I thank my supervisors, Prof. Dr. Ben Schoenmaker and Prof. Dr. Monika Baar, for their faith in the project.

My heartfelt gratitude goes to Olga Manojlović Pintar for her expert reality checks and more. Thanks to Danilo Šarenac and Nenad Lajbenšperger for sharing their ideas and opinions. Thanks to Nemanja Kalezić for the Retreat photographs; thanks to Radina Vučetić, Nevena Daković, Ljiljana Dobrovšak and Vladimir Čeh for sending me their articles. My sincere thanks to the members of the fictive kinships of remembrance for their time and their contributions: Ljubomir Saramandić, Uroš Matijević, Alan Cumming, Fabian Vendrig, Tanja Vendrig, John M. Stienen, Stanoje Stojković, Ljiljana Stameniće, Nenad Mitrović, Marko Nikolić, Mark Keating, Željko Popović, and Djordje Mihailović.

My appreciation to Barbara Unković for specialist proof-reading.

I thank the following institutions for allowing me to access and use their documents: in Belgrade — the Archive of the Serbian Academy of Arts and Sciences, Serbian Military Archive, National Library of Serbia, Institute for the Protection of Cultural Monuments of Serbia, Historical Museum of Serbia, Gallery of the Serbian Academy of Arts and Sciences, Jewish Historical Museum, Museum of Applied Arts, Book Museum, Airforce Museum, Media Centre – Defence; elsewhere in Serbia — Jadar Museum, Negotin Krajina Museum, Museum of the Rudnik Takovo Region, Srem Museum, Smederevo Museum, Vojvodina Museum, Kikinda Museum, Kraljevo Museum, Niš Museum, Valjevo Museum, Zrenjanin Museum, Homeland Museum Knjaževac, and the Serbian House in Corfu.

I was given abundant love and support by my family and friends, from around Europe and beyond. Thank you, Ian, for taking me “to see dead people” for many a “holiday”, from Flanders to the Somme, Valjevo to Kragujevac, Thessaloniki to Corfu, and for asking purposeful questions.

I am grateful to my daughters for not changing the subject every time I mentioned my thesis. Thanks to Ludmila Stern for her steadfast encouragement. The International Criminal Court, my former employer, granted me valuable study leave days, while my supportive colleagues and le directeur cheered me on. Un grand merci à tous et à toutes.

I was six years old when I first heard of the Retreat. Aleksa Petrović, a Salonika veteran, was a friend of the family. He wore medals and had studied in France after the First World War — the most ardent Francophile I remember meeting outside my own family.

My paternal grandmother's father Vljako Velikić was a reservist, married with three children when the war started. He was lucky to return after the war — I have his name tag. My maternal grandfather's father, Miloš Nikić, left his wife Jelena and their four children behind when he was mobilised in 1914, also as a reservist. My grandfather, Ljubiša Nikić, lost his father at the age of 10, when Miloš died in Albania.

Some came back and some did not. I would have liked to dedicate this work to them all.

However, if there is anything I have understood in this research is that past can make fools of us all, if we let it. The future matters so much more than the past.

Marini i Lari, mojim ćerkama.

To Marina and Lara, my daughters.
