Undertaking a PhD is a fascinating yet challenging adventure and I am so fortunate that these people have accompanied me on this journey.

I remain grateful to my supervisor, Ernst van Alphen, for his initial interest and trust. Without his support, I would have had no chance to come to the beautiful country of the Netherlands to start my PhD project. During my PhD, he generously allowed me to formulate my thinking and set no limits to my interdisciplinary exploration. I owe thanks to my co-supervisor, Eliza Steinbock, for their persistent support. They gave me constructive suggestions regarding my dissertation drafts and encouraged me to become an independent scholar. Eliza always gave me positive feedback when I kept doubting my work. I am sincerely thankful for the assistance of all interviewees and friends who connected me to potential interviewees. Without their kindness and generosity, my research would be merely an empty proposal on paper.

Guanmian Xu and Hui Ji, I am most fortunate to have friends like them, who have supported me in every possible way. Their home has been my safe haven in Leiden. Every time I came across an academic question, I would go to Guanmian; every time I felt clueless about my life, I would call on Hui. I am hugely grateful to my close friends outside Leiden, Shuaishuai Wang and Tianyang Zhou. Shuaishuai read through my manuscript and offered me his critical reflections; Tianyang listened to my concerns and showed me how to broaden my thinking. Both intelligent and hard-working, they have provided me with role models in everyday life.

Doing a PhD is a lonely journey, but I am lucky to have amazing friends and colleagues. I give great thanks to Bingying Yang, Thomas Collomb, Qing Wang, Ting Shi, Huayu Zhang, Shuai Yuan, and Boyu Xiao. I still remember how stressed I was during the first year of my PhD. Meetings with you guys smoothed me and restored my confidence. Fen Liu and Ning Wei were my best neighbors and I can always trust them. Qing Cao, Lingling Weng, Xiaowu Sun, Zijie Zhou, Yixiu Jiang, Yujing Tan, Jiayi Xin, Hang Cheng, Han Hu, Simone Luijks, my M'MAZYNG ladies (Claudia Giese, Agnieszka Kazimierczuk, Yuxi Nie, Nikki Sterkenburg, Marieke Visser) ... As I struggled with my PhD, their friendship offered me great relief and gave me an enormous amount of energy. My colleagues Rita van de Poel, Lotte Pet, Tim Vergeer, Ylva Klassen, Tingting Hui, Lisanne Wepler, and Céline Zaepffel, you made Leiden University a lovely place to me. Yra van Dijk, Bareez Majid, and Merel Oudshoorn, I appreciated talks with you in my dark days of feeling lost.

Two reading groups benefited me a lot in the final stage of my PhD, especially during the endless Corona lockdown: one is a feminist reading group initiated by Fan Yang, the other is a media studies reading group initiated by Qian Huang. Fan and Qian are passionate, smart, enthusiastic people and I got to know more scholars like them because of the two groups. Reading with these groups fueled my desire for knowledge and boosted my hope for future research.

I was also lucky to receive help from Cara Wills. I met her at academic conferences and she generously gave me valuable time and advice on improving my research project. Special thanks go to my doctoral committee members, Bingchun Meng, Florian Schneider, Sybille Lammes, and Thomas Poell, whose comprehensive reviews and constructive feedbacks pushed my thinking further and brought new energy to my research.

I am beholden to Jing Wu, Hsin-I Liu, Simin Li, Jiahui Shan, and Hongzhe Wang. Conversations with them at Peking University sparked my interest in academic thinking and motivated me to pursue an academic career. Their critical spirit, intellectual curiosity, and broad interests taught me how to have fun in academic thinking, which gives me long-term benefits.

I am deeply indebted to my parents, Yan Li and Xiangang Guan. They always respect my career choice and support my decision with all they have. The more I read about feminist theories, the more I understand my mother and Chinese women like her, which is a crucial gain of my PhD: if a humanities scholar cannot understand real humans and the social environment around them, what is the meaning of reading tons of books? I am also lucky to have a great partner, Xiao Zhang. We talked a lot in the past four years despite the long distance between us. Without his company, I might have obtained my degree earlier...I'm joking. It is such a present that we have gone through the distance challenge and become each other's best friends.

I was often trapped in self-doubt and feeling lost during my PhD and I extend my gratitude to all of those who played a role in what I have managed to arrive here.
