ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I wish to express my utmost gratitude to my doctoral supervisors Madeleine Hosli, of Leiden University, and Frans-Paul van der Putten, independent researcher and of the Clingendael Institute. Your complementary expertise in International Relations theory, diplomacy, and political methodology, and Chinese politics and East Asian security, and history, created the ideal synergy to develop my work. Madeleine, I am extremely grateful for your supervision, believing in me when my research on the topic was still in a rudimentary stage. Being accepted into the Ph.D. program at a leading European university has provided for a wonderful opportunity, and opened doors for others. I recall flying from Beijing in the spring of 2017 to meet you. Ever since that first conversation your support has been unwavering. Thank you very much for your guidance in this long journey; both substantively, in particular in setting up and improving the foundational part of the dissertation, and with respect to the process leading me toward the completion of the dissertation. You made the doctoral project a most rewarding experience. Frans-Paul, our first conversation was in November 2013. We were then already discussing regional order in the context of Kissinger's Pacific Community, the topic of the master's thesis that I was writing at the time. Some coffees and advice later, you agreed to supervise me together with Madeleine. Your niche expertise enabled me to specialize in the field that I am most passionate about and contribute to the existing scholarship with novel ideas. Doing this in your own time next to your busy work at Clingendael is about the most generous thing anyone has ever done for me. Frans-Paul, with the greatest acknowledgment: thank you.

Significantly, the book is based on the master's thesis that I wrote under the supervision of Zhang Qingmin while at Peking University from 2015 to 2017. Much of what I know about how Chinese politics works, he taught me. The classes and the many conversations with Fan Shiming, Jia Qingguo, Jie Dalei, and Lei Shaohua were also fundamental in shaping my understanding of China. In addition, the Law and Politics of International Security master's program at the Vrije Universiteit in Amsterdam led by Wolfgang Wagner and Wouter Werner provided the perfect theoretical foundation. Further recognition is owed to Bastiaan van Apeldoorn, Naná de Graaff, and Henk Overbeek, who provided helpful comments on my work. The elaborate feedback offered so generously by them as well as by Aurelio Insisa, Gustav Meibauer, and Giulio Pugliese has been crucial. Reviewing the whole book, providing many pages of detailed feedback, the role of Kerry Brown cannot be overstated. Thank you all very much. Furthermore, Naná de Graaff's practical counsel has been of tremendous value. She is a great inspirational leader who has influenced my thinking a lot. Another valuable contribution has come from Lloyd Liu, who assisted me in finding some Chinese sources and helped me locate the lower-ranking policy-makers on the list of most influential players in Beijing. He assisted as well in a parallel VU project led by Naná de Graaff involving social network analysis. The Figures in Chapters 8 and 9 loosely draw on the research design used there. Needless to say, all analysis and writing in this dissertation are wholly mine, as are any potential errors.

My friend of two decades, Paul Petrutoni, designed the cover as well as formatted the entire manuscript to make it print-ready.
