

Universiteit
Leiden

The Netherlands

Return to sender: a multi-method study of guardianship against transnational sexual exploitation of children

Koning, A.

Citation

Koning, A. (2023, June 22). Return to sender: a multi-method study of guardianship against transnational sexual exploitation of children. Retrieved from <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/3594097>

Version: Publisher's Version

License: Licence agreement concerning inclusion of doctoral thesis in the Institutional Repository of the University of Leiden

Downloaded from: <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/3594097>

Note: To cite this publication please use the final published version (if applicable).

The background of the cover is a textured, yellowish-gold watercolor wash. A solid black horizontal line is positioned to the left of the title, extending from the left edge of the frame.

Return to sender

A multi-method study of guardianship against transnational sexual exploitation of children.

ANNEKE KONING

In recent decades, countries around the globe have taken measures to stop sexual exploitation of children by transnational offenders. But despite the growing attention for this problem, scientific research about sexual exploitation of children in the context of travel and tourism (SECTT) is in its infancy. Using a novel application of the theoretical framework of guardianship to SECTT, this doctoral dissertation investigates the role of third parties in combating child sexual exploitation by transnational offenders. How can governments, in both destination and sending countries, enact guardianship against SECTT? To what extent can individual citizens, like you and me, help to stop it? And which lessons can be learned for more effective policy?

The studies in this book illustrate the possibilities and challenges for governments and citizens to enact guardianship against SECTT, while demonstrating different research methods that can be used to bring more light to this under-researched problem. Highlighting the importance of perceptions, unpicking the responsibilities of sending countries, and at times challenging popular conceptions, the book's timely plea against superficial solutions draws attention to the need for more evidence-based policy. Those involved in child protection, from academics to practitioners, will find the material in this book an insightful starting point to inform new ways of confronting SECTT.