Rice Eaters in the Land of Cheese:
The Context of Ethnic Socialization of Chinese-Dutch Children

Yiran Yang

1. Chinese-Dutch children evaluate their ethnic ingroup and the White outgroup most positively, and the Black outgroup least positively (this dissertation).
2. The pandemic brings more experiences of (subtle) discrimination and stronger ethnic identity among Chinese immigrant mothers living in the Netherlands (this dissertation).
3. Chinese immigrant mothers show color-evasive behaviors in interaction with their children (this dissertation).
4. Chinese immigrant mothers show patterns of ethnic-racial focus that reflect white normativity by focusing more on people of color than on White people (this dissertation).
5. There is an overrepresentation of White authors, illustrators, and characters, as well as the preference for white skin color in popular Chinese children's books (this dissertation).
6. A good understanding of parental and situational influences on children's interethnic prejudice is necessary.
7. Insights on interethnic attitudes and relations require investigating population-specific mechanisms.
8. Research on intergroup ideologies and behaviors requires culturally sensitive instruments.
9. Not all those who wander are lost. – J. R. R. Tolkien
10. Once a person has kind thoughts, many good things will come. (人一旦存了善念，不因不即便会有许多好事凑来)
