Curriculum Vitae

Francisca Infante Espínola was born in Chile on March 4th, 1973. She received her degree in Psychology in 1997 from Diego Portales University. On June 8th, 2000 she obtained her master's degree in Education at Harvard University. She has spent her career implementing and evaluating policies and programs addressing human development, equity, and social justice at the international, national, and community level. She has also worked developing curriculum and training on community engagement and social change for university programmes on health and social science. From 2013-2020 she was Dean of Social Science at Universidad de las Américas in Chile. Currently she is the Board President at the Global Implementation Society (GIS) where she is committed to build evidence as well as define key elements for replicability while respecting context-specific culture. She is also a board member at Equipundo: Center for Masculinities and Social Justice.
