ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I thank my superb team of supervisors. This dissertation would not have been possible without my advisor, Dr. Koen de Ceuster. He is the most critical reader I have ever known, and I learned that critique can be inspiring and something to look forward to, albeit not immediately. Prof. Anne Murcott has seen many ups and downs of the process from the start, and I thank her for her support and patience. Prof. Nira Wickramasinghe graciously opened up space for me to nurture this dissertation, and I am grateful for her generosity and trust. The support of previous LIAS directors, Prof. Erik-Jan Zürcher, Prof. Nira Wickramasinghe, and Dr. Nathal Dessing, allowed me to continue this project within LIAS.

Writing a dissertation is truly a collaborative process. My deepest thanks go to my interlocutors, who generally shared their time and experiences with me, as well as personal archives, retrieved from their wardrobes, containing documents that would have been unattainable otherwise. I thank them for bringing back memories of their past that they would rather not revisit. I am especially grateful to my main gatekeeper for their support, engagement, and encouragement. He took on the role of my “fieldwork supervisor,” and it will not be an exaggeration to say that I would not have been able to obtain the majority of the data in this dissertation without their help.

At “Garbage Matters: A Comparative History of Waste in East Asia project, I thank Prof. Katarzyna Cwiertka for providing venues to develop this project, and Klarijn Anderson-Loven for her editorial work as well as administrative assistance. I also thank institutions that supported this project: the Leiden Institute for Area Studies, the Leiden University Fund, the Kyujanggak Institute for Korean Studies, the Nordic Institute of Area Studies. I had the opportunity to present parts of this dissertation at workshops hosted by the Social Science Research Council, the Nam Center for Korean Studies at the University of Michigan, and the GW Institute for Korean Studies at the George Washington University. I thank the discussants of these workshops for offering feedback that was instrumental in developing this dissertation.

Monotonous days of writing got better with friends, who tuned my life whenever needed with their brilliant silliness. Olivia Dung and Rebecca Tompkins offered camaraderie, moral support, and fun. Xinrong Ma spent many evening writing sessions with me. Hong Jin Jo, Young Sun Park, and Scott Hoornaert read countless drafts with glorious messiness and offered their feedback. They all accommodated my rants far more frequently than chapter drafts. I thank Saeyoung Park for her generosity and encouragement. Her readings helped me push forward when this project felt amorphous.

Finally, I am grateful to my family – Lee Jinok, Pak Hyosun, Han Jeong Hugh, Han Eunsoo – for enduring the time and bringing me so much joy. My mom listened to so many stories of my dissertation via FaceTime and revived the stories of the people whom my grandmother fed, and whom I was surrounded with growing up; it is serendipitous that I get to write about them.
