Modelling the role of mycorrhizal associations in soil carbon cycling: insights from global analyses of mycorrhizal vegetation

PhD thesis at Leiden University, the Netherlands and Hasselt University, Belgium.

The research described in this thesis was conducted at the Institute of Environmental Sciences (CML), Leiden University, the Netherlands during 2018-2021, and later for the Leiden & Hasselt joint-PhD project, at the Hasselt University (Doctor of Sciences) during 2021-2022.

CONTENTS

Chapter 1	1
General introduction
Chapter 2	19
Mycelium chemistry differs markedly between ectomycorrhizal and arbuscular mycorrhizal fungi
Chapter 3	49
Implementation of mycorrhizal mechanisms into the soil carbon model improves the prediction of long-term processes of plant litter decomposition
Chapter 4	85
Global estimation of mycorrhizal impact on the plant litter decomposition process
Chapter 5	107
Climate change and mycorrhizal-vegetation distribution impact the future soil litter decomposition process
Chapter 6	133
General discussion and conclusion
