

Universiteit
Leiden
The Netherlands

The geoeconomics of the Single Market for financial services

Quaglia, L.; Verdun, A.C.

Citation

Quaglia, L., & Verdun, A. C. (2024). The geoeconomics of the Single Market for financial services. Journal Of Common Market Studies, 62(4), 1046-1062. doi:10.1111/jcms.13595

Version: Publisher's Version

License: Creative Commons CC BY 4.0 license

Downloaded from: <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/3775259>

Note: To cite this publication please use the final published version (if applicable).

DETAILS

RELATIONS

JCMS: Journal of Common Market Studies

Volume 62, Issue 4: The Goeconomic Turn of the Single European Market

Jul 2024

Pages 917-1115

ARTICLE

The Goeconomics of the Single Market for Financial Services

View article page

Lucia Quaglia, Amy Verdun

CITE

Check for updates

© 2024 The Author(s). JCMS: Journal of Common Market Studies published by University Association for Contemporary

European Studies and John Wiley & Sons Ltd.

<https://doi.org/10.1111/jcms.13595>

ble debordering' (Schimmelfennig, 2021) by removing barriers to intra-EU trade in goods (first) and services (later) as well as barriers to trade with third countries. By doing so, the EU sought to manage globalisation at home (Jacoby and Meunier, 2010), whilst contributing to developing international trade and financial liberalisation (Herranz-Surrallés et al., 2024).

The literature has pointed to several sources of EU bargaining power in international economic negotiations. First, a key resource of the EU is its sheer 'market size' (Drezner, 2007; Dür, 2011). The second resource that the EU can deploy is its 'regulatory capacity', defined as 'a jurisdiction's ability to formulate, monitor, and enforce a set of market rules' (Bach and Newman, 2007, p. 831; Posner, 2009; Posner and Véron, 2010; see also Bradford, 2012, 2020). The third source is the cohesiveness of the EU, which can affect its external influence (Da Conceição-Heldt and Meunier, 2014). If the preferences of EU member states are aligned, the EU has a cohesive stance and is (de facto) able externally to speak with one voice. This situation can occur even if the EU formally does not have a single representation in international negotiations and the European Commission does not have the mandate to represent the EU (Mügge, 2011). Another side effect of cohesiveness is that the so-called third countries are unable to exploit differences amongst member states. By contrast, when EU member states are divided, others may take © 2024 The Author(s). JCMS: Journal of Common Market Studies published by University Association for Contemporary European Studies and John Wiley & Sons Ltd.