Appendix I

Below is the list of gender separatist utopian works I have found throughout the years in my research project. As I mentioned in the body of the text before, certain works were derived from entries listed on Wikipedia, GoodReads and such cataloguing websites, while others originate from feminist zines accessible online, although some are no longer available. Over the years, additional titles have been accumulated from my supervisors, other professors with an interest in the subject, and colleagues within the field. Unfortunately, certain separatist feminist online groups mentioned in secondary sources have disappeared over time. Below is a chronological list of the primary literature that I have found. The list contains both female and male authors. Some of them are misogynistic and some misandrist.

Christine de Pizan, The Book of the City of Ladies, 1405.

Sarah Scott, A Description of Millenium Hall and the Country Adjacent, 1762.

Elizabeth Corbett, New Amazonia: A Foretaste of the Future, 1889.

Mary Lane, Mizora: A Prophecy: A Mss. Found Among the Private Papers of Princess Vera Zarovitch:

Being a True and Faithful Account of her Journey to the Interior of the Earth, with a Careful

Description of the Country and its Inhabitants, their Customs, Manners, and Government, 1890.
