I never anticipated this work would become such an extensive journey. Throughout the study, many significant life events occurred, and new developments in Indonesian labour movements have even emerged. However, I believe documenting the collective experiences of those who participated in this study is always valuable, offering rich lessons, especially amidst the current social and political challenges faced by workers in Indonesia.

My journey began with a conversation with activists, Abu Mufakhir and Khotib Sunhaji, about distinctive practices of unionism in Central Java, just after the funeral of Fauzi Abdullah, a prominent figure in the labour-NGO community, in 2009 in Bogor. I owe my deepest appreciation to these individuals, who sparked my interest in workers' movements in the regions.

For this reason, I must express my profound gratitude to those who helped me embark on this in-depth study of the movement, especially to all trade union activists from the National Workers' Union (SPN) of Pekalongan, Semarang, and its central board. I also appreciate the factory workers, home-based workers, and NGO activists who participated in my research. To all the special individuals in Pekalongan and Semarang, without whom I could not have reached this stage, I have learned so much about the real challenges in organising labour organisations. A special debt is owed to Budhy Prathamo, Bowo Leksono, Sumanta, Catur Andarwanto, Damirin, Edy Susilo, Rima Astuti, and Karyanto Pradana.

At Leiden University, this study opened new horizons for understanding labour movements. I am thankful to Bart Barendregt for his critical and enriching anthropological insights, as well as his personal encouragement. My thanks go to Ratna Saptari for her guidance from the early stages of this study. Her contribution helped me develop a critical analysis of everyday labour problems through an anthropological lens, while reminding me to constantly consider sociological analysis and the political economic contexts. I am grateful for her support, alongside Ben White, in maintaining my focus during various stages of writing this thesis in the countryside. I also appreciate Patricia Spyer for welcoming me into Leiden academic community.

I am grateful to lecturers, staff, and colleagues at the Institute of Cultural Anthropology and Development Sociology, Leiden University; especially to Sabine Luning and Erik Bähre who had facilitated seminars and group discussions. I cherished the friendships with colleagues during our PhD journey: A. Nuril Huda, Lusvita Nuzuliyanti, Zane Kripe, Christoph Rippe, Wendelmoet Hamelink, Nuraini Juliastuti, Zamzam Fauzanafi, and Annemarie Samuels.

I am thankful to the General Directorate of Higher Education (DIKTI), Ministry of Education and Culture of Indonesia, and the Leiden University Fund (LUF), for their financial support, which made this study possible.

I am grateful to colleagues at the Department of Sociology, Universitas Indonesia, for their support, especially to Linda D. Ibrahim, Iwan Gardono Sujatmiko, the late Kamanto Sunarto, Ida Ruwaida, and Lucia Ratih Kusumadewi. I also thank the students from Universitas Indonesia and Universitas Nasional who assisted in organising the data.

My thanks go to scholars and labour activists who provided meaningful insights and kept me updated on Indonesian labour issues through intensive discussions and collaborations: Surya Tjandra, Jeroen Merk, Endang Rokhani, Syarif Arifin, Fahmi Panimbang, Indrasari Tjandraningsih, and Samuel Gultom. I am also grateful to Teri L. Caraway and Michele Ford, whose decade-long collaboration enriched my understanding of Indonesian labour politics. My gratitude extends to Kosuke Mizuno for facilitating discussions, and Ward Berenschot and Gerry van Klinken for allowing me to publish brief short articles. I am particularly grateful to Vedi R. Hadiz, who provided opportunities for initial research on this movement through decentralisation study groups.

My thanks go to Indonesian friends throughout my time in Leiden, Jakarta, and Depok, with whom I shared the struggles of PhD life and exchanged tremendous support: Mega Atria, Taufiq Hanafi, Nazarudin, Wijayanto, Fitri Nugraheni, Kurniawan Saefullah, Abdul Wahid, Herlambang Wiratraman, Fachrizal Afandi, Santy Kouwagam, Jeremy Balukh, Henky Widaja, Andy Fuller, and especially Ivonne Martin and Rizki Fillaili for their continuous encouragement and support, helping me maintain my enthusiasm for writing. I am deeply thankful for the attention and support given by IR Irawati Pattinasarany, Nadia Yovani, Riaty Raffudin, Erna Chotim, Dyatika WP Yasih, Inaya Rakhmani. and Andi Rahman.

Last but not least, I am grateful for the kindness of Hedi Hinzler, who provided a pleasant place to stay in Leiden and offered personal encouragement during my time there. The personal support of Titik Suharjanik and Jojok Suprajitno's family, and Seto Hardjana during my study period in the Netherlands, was invaluable in fostering positive thoughts. Finally, my deepest gratitude goes to my family: Dudut Yudiantoro, Ipuk Tri Rahayu, Riza Fahlivy, Nur Alion, and Dimas Raihan Mahardika, and especially my late mother, Siti Hastuti Sugianto, who passed away at the end of my fieldwork period. Their deep understanding, patience, and meaningful support have been invaluable in helping me reach this moment.
