

Universiteit
Leiden

The Netherlands

Rotten trees, bad apples? Understanding the intergenerational transmission of extremism

Wieringen, L. van

Citation

Wieringen, L. van. (2025, November 27). Rotten trees, bad apples?: Understanding the intergenerational transmission of extremism. Retrieved from <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/4283781>

Version: Publisher's Version

License: Licence agreement concerning inclusion of doctoral thesis in the Institutional Repository of the University of Leiden

Downloaded from: <https://hdl.handle.net/1887/4283781>

Note: To cite this publication please use the final published version (if applicable).

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This journey would not have been possible without the support of many individuals to whom I am deeply grateful. First and foremost, I extend my sincere gratitude to my supervisors, Marieke and Daan. It is through your continuous trust and encouragement that I was able to navigate this project (and its challenges) with confidence. Marieke, your sharp insights and thoughtful feedback consistently pushed me to think critically and refine my ideas. Your mentorship has been pivotal to my development as a researcher – and I want to thank you for fostering a team culture that promotes curiosity, collaboration, and growth. Daan, your creative mind and kindheartedness have left a lasting impression on both my academic work and personal development. Thank you for welcoming me into your network, stimulating out-of-the-box thinking, and always taking my input seriously – even when I myself did not.

I am thankful to my current and former colleagues at ISGA, who enriched this journey through stimulating discussions and mutual support: Jolien, Leah, Olga, Arnaldo, Pauline, Martín, Mischa, Laura, Don, Esmée, Kamilla, Anouk, and Seran. Special thanks to Kathi for being a constant source of motivation and German steadfastness throughout this process. My appreciation also extends to the Scandinavian colleagues I met along the way and during my visiting fellowship at the Center for Research on Extremism (C-REX) in Norway, Oslo. Moreover, this research benefited immensely from the contributions of several student assistants and interns: Zonne, Pablo, Chiara, Dilara, Francesco, and Ilaria. Your efforts advanced this project profoundly.

I am particularly grateful to all interview participants who were trusting enough to share their stories with me. This dissertation would not have been possible without their honesty and openness.

A sincere thank you to the partner organizations that facilitated data collection, especially NCTV, WODC, AIVD, the municipality of The Hague, Raad voor de Rechtspraak, OM, DJI, and the detention centres where I conducted my interviews. Particular recognition goes to Paul and Ingmar for their trust and willingness to explore new research paths.

Throughout the past years, my collaboration with Landelijk Steunpunt Extremisme (LSE) as a research fellow has been particularly rewarding. I am thankful for the stimulating environment LSE provides, and for the opportunity to work alongside such talented individuals. I would also like to thank Fiore Geelhoed, Edward Kleemans and Jeanine de Roy van Zijdewijn, whose early encouragement sparked my interest in academia when I was still a student.

Finally, I thank my friends and family for their unwavering support, especially Boas and Miriam. Above all, my deepest gratitude goes to Maarten, who stood by me every step of the way. You made me believe in this dissertation as much as I believe in us. Ik hou van je.

CURRICULUM VITAE

Layla van Wieringen (1994, Nijmegen) completed her secondary education at Stedelijk Gymnasium Nijmegen in 2012, after which she obtained a BSc in Criminology at Vrije Universiteit Amsterdam. In 2017, Layla obtained a post-graduate degree in Investigative and Legal Psychology at the United Nations Interregional Crime and Justice Research Institute (UNICRI) in Turin, Italy. In 2019, she completed the MSc Crisis and Security Management at Leiden University with honors. After volunteering at the Radicalization Helpline (Samenwerkingsverband Marokkaanse Nederlanders) and interning at the Counterterrorism and National Security division of the Dutch Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Layla worked as a junior researcher at the National Committee Investigating Intercountry Adoptions.

In 2020, she started as a researcher/lecturer in the Violence and Violence Prevention research group at the Institute of Security and Global Affairs at Leiden University. She completed her PhD thesis in 2025, under the supervision of Marieke Liem and Daan Weggemans. In addition to her doctoral research, Layla has been collaborating with practitioners and academics in various contexts. In 2023, she was invited as a Visiting Research Fellow by the Center for Research on Extremism (C-REX), in Oslo, Norway. Moreover, since 2022, Layla has been involved at the Landelijk Steunpunt Extremisme (LSE) as a Research Fellow, and she has been closely collaborating with the National Coordinator Counterterrorism and Security (NCTV) as an administrator of the Kennisbank Terroristische Organisaties.