This book examines Fayḍ al-Raḥmān fī tarjamat tafsīr kalām Mālik al-Dayyān (The Grace of the Merciful in the Interpretative Translation of the Words of the King and the Judge), a Sufi exegesis authored by a prominent Javanese scholar Muḥammad Ṣāliḥ b. ‘Umar al-Samārānī (d. 1321/1903). It investigates the Fayḍ al-Raḥmān within its intellectual, historical, and hermeneutical contexts. It tackles two issues: 1) how did the work emerge as a Sufi tafsīr and 2) which interpretive strategies and conceptual frameworks does the author employ in engaging with the Qur’ān?

We start the course of our analysis by tracing back the formation of Fayḍ al-Raḥmān in nineteenth-century Java, situating Ṣāliḥ within the Meccan–Javanese intellectual networks of his time. The findings demonstrate that Ṣāliḥ composed his tafsīr in response to the pervasive influence of the Akbarian mystical school, which had primarily shaped Javanese mysticism. Rather than rejecting these traditions outright, Ṣāliḥ reinterpreted the popular concepts in Javanese mysticism through the epistemological and ethical lens of the Ghazālīan school. The Fayḍ al-Raḥmān thus offers an alternative Sufi hermeneutic – one that re-centered Qur’ānic interpretation as the spiritual journey that emphasizes the discipline of rituals and the soul purification – to the philosophical ideas of Being, especially the doctrine of the seven grades of Being that permeated the Javanese mystical world.

We further analyze Ṣāliḥ’s hermeneutical approach. The results demonstrate that Ṣāliḥ adapted al-Ghazālī’s mystical hermeneutics of the twofold structure of meaning – ẓāhir (exoteric) and bāṭin (esoteric) – by reconfiguring the theory of the spiritual journey as its principal interpretive key. For Ṣāliḥ, the Qur’ān’s esoteric dimension signifies the believer’s gradual ascent toward the divine knowledge, thereby integrating moral, intellectual, and mystical cultivation into a single exegetical process.
